

Starting a catering business

Making the decision to start your own catering business is an important step and you must do the necessary research to ensure you get the best start possible and go on to build a thriving business.

The first step has to be the purchase of catering equipment. Regular household pots and pans just aren't robust enough to withstand the constant use they will receive. Undoubtedly, with constant food preparation by different staff the catering equipment will receive countless knocks and bumps which means your products have to be particularly durable. As well as durability, the size has to be taken into consideration as you may well be catering for numerous customers all at the same time.

Of course when you have industrial sized catering equipment you also need industrial sized cleaning equipment to ensure the strict hygiene standards are complied with. The food will also have to be stored in suitably sized fridges, freezers and cooling cabinets. In caf&Atilde;&copy;s and restaurants you will need special equipment to keep food warm.

It is important when you start your catering business that you find a reliable supplier of all your catering equipment needs. You will need sturdy, robust equipment that will last, especially in today's economic climate. You will also need to be able to purchase replacements immediately. At Commercial Kitchens Online, we are an online supplier that has a constant supply of sturdy catering equipment at affordable prices, which is an important factor when starting a catering business. We supply commercial catering equipment and can also provide a design and planning service to ensure the equipment meets all your requirements.
